Black Light Christophe Wall-Romana, 2026-02-10 A radical assessment of the racial motives underlying the conception of photography and cinema Conventional histories have long traced the origins of photography and cinema to the goal of reproducing the visible world Black Light offers a radical counter to this understanding Investigating the optical cosmological and racial thought that surrounded their conception Christophe Wall Romana argues that these media developed out of a desire to visualize what cannot be seen Taking as its starting point the concurrent invention of the telescope and industrialization of the transatlantic slave trade Black Light shows how photography and cinema are entangled with two key preoccupations of the Enlightenment visualizing the mysteries of the cosmos and managing Blackness Wall Romana uses literary and technological sources to demonstrate how racial and astronomical thinking interwove throughout the long development of our modern visual media Retracing the impulses behind nonmimetic photoimaging and dynamic modeling he exposes the racial underpinnings of research on photosensitive compounds such as silver nitrate and the racist lenses applied in post-Copernican cosmology Black Light charts the pivotal period from the seventeenth through the nineteenth century when Europeans were reckoning with multiple worlds and natural philosophy was giving way to mechanical objectivity Wall Romana shows how engagement with the nature of light was always entangled with racist discourses on Blackness especially after the 1801 discovery of the invisible spectrum and its paradox of black light Deprovincializing media archaeology this book presents a groundbreaking historical framework with which to reenvision our dominant modes of seeing and understanding the world Retail e-book files for this title are screen reader friendly with images accompanied by short alt text and/or extended descriptions

The Legal Regulation of Academic Freedom Lucia Pallier, 2025-11-12 This book compares and examines the ways in which law addresses and resolves conflicts between academic freedom and responsibility Academic freedom is an important value in the modern scientific and technologically driven world Societies depend heavily on the commodities of scientific progress especially in essential sectors such as healthcare and as a result research is now carried out in an increasingly globalized context protected by national and international law This freedom can however be problematic if it is decoupled from a commitment to academic responsibility scientific rigor and good professional conduct Focusing on the example of biomedical research this book examines how various legal systems address the interplay between academic rights and duties More specifically it considers the tension between national constitutions and legal doctrine which tend to focus on concepts such as science inherent laws or professional standards and international law which establishes a right for everyone to enjoy the benefits of scientific progress thereby implying a duty on the part of the academic community to conduct science in a way that maximizes its benefits to society at large The book concludes by proposing policy reforms that aim to balance these demands and thus reduce tensions within the academic system This book will appeal to scholars and students working at the intersection of law and science as well as policymakers and STEM scientists concerned with issues of academic freedom
