Abstract. The increase in government expenditure on education is commonly considered to have a positive effect on economic growth by raising GDP per capita. This essay aims to examine the effectiveness of education investment in driving economic growth. The panel Ordinary Least Square (OLS) model is used to establish a regression model with data sets for Asian least developed, developed, and developing countries from 1995 to 2015 and a case study on China and Malaysia. The regression model manifests public spending on education as having a stimulative effect on economic growth in countries that have a stable and relatively more developed economy. The case study investigated the relationships between six factors relating to the government's expenditure in education and found that investment in secondary schools has a strong relationship with prominent economic returns.

Keywords: Government expenditure; education; economic growth; panel OLS estimator.

1. Introduction

1.1. Research Background and Related research

The significance of education on economic growth has constantly been argued. The study conducted by Mingat et al. found substantial distinctions between countries on investment in the education sector among countries. They proposed that even not taking the systematic differences in education across developed and less-developed countries into consideration, government priority is another factor that countries set differently in allocating public spending [1].

John Baffes and Anwar Shah argue that: "Public investment in human resource—developed followed by private investment provides the most important stimulus for economic growth", and their research on productivity of public spending based on the endogenous-growth theory, also gives an empirical support to the government's strategy of enlarge public spending on education and training, in order to empower human capital in a nation. For both developed and low-income countries, the average development capital was "twice as much as the private capital stocks", they found, which supports an expected strong relationship between larger government expenditure on education with economic growth [2].

Another study was conducted by Mallick et. al. on 14 Asian countries and concluded that government investment in the education sector is "an essential determinant of economic growth in the long term" [3]. In their evidence they suggested that government investment in education could generate an unskillful labor force, thereby, what drives economic growth is the productivity improvement that can result in an increase in national output levels [4].

This paper will discover the relationship between government expenditure on education and economic growth. In this paper, the efficiency of government public expenditure on education will be discussed by taking the economic return, which is the national economic growth, as a determinant. In this condition, if a government is allocating its expenditures effectively, then its expenditure on education spending should stimulate a nation's economic growth, based on what Baffes and Shah propose [4]. Therefore, this nation could say it had allocated its government budget effectively to improving human capital. We hypothesise that government expenditure on education will lead to higher economic growth.

History Alexander J. Field, 2012-12-06 This collection represents a modest attempt to chart a new course for the intellectual discipline known as economic history. The book is not about productivity growth in the 1990s lest the title give rise to any confusion. As a group these essays suggest new and potentially fruitful areas or approaches for research and at the same time address weaknesses in past efforts. One important audience will be graduate students attempting to decide whether to write a dissertation in economic history or trying to select or refine dissertation topics in the area and determine how to approach them. Some of the essays will most certainly be appropriate additions to the or semester courses in economic history that remain a fixture in quarter graduate economics training programs. A second audience should be established: scholars who are now or have in the past done research in economic history and are interested in the perspectives of a relatively younger group of scholars. The term younger is used here advisedly to describe a group of scholars born between 1943 and 1954. Nevertheless the authors of these essays can on at least one dimension be distinguished from the pathbreaking new economic historians who established their academic reputations in the early 1960s. Indeed the contributors to this volume include students of such pioneers as Richard Easterlin, Albert Fishlow, William Parker, and Jeffrey Williamson. Review - Fernand Braudel Center for the Study of Economies, Historical Systems, and Civilizations, 1988

The Economic Development of Southeast Asia Hal Hill, 2002 This major four volume collection brings together the key analytical contributions on the economies of Southeast Asia countries which together have a population of more than 500 million people. This group of economies is of interest for a number of reasons. Firstly they feature great diversity. Singapore has one of the highest per capita incomes in the world while several of the mainland Southeast Asian states are among the poorest. Brunei is a tiny oil sultanate while Indonesia is the world's fourth largest nation. In addition several of these economies have been consistently among the world's most open while others are emerging from a long period of international commercial isolation. Thirdly the group includes one sizeable country, the Philippines, which for reasons still only poorly understood has consistently underperformed compared to its potential. Four of the economies, Indonesia, Malaysia, Singapore, Thailand, grew extremely quickly in the three decades through to the recent Asian economic crisis. Lastly the Asian economic crisis of 1997-98 particularly affected three of the countries, Indonesia, Malaysia, and Thailand. The factors explaining this sudden and largely unanticipated event are still only poorly understood. This comprehensive reference collection is essential reading for all those interested in the economic performance of these economies. Journal of Peace Research, 1979 The Journal of European Economic History, 1977

Trade as the Engine of Growth in Developing Countries James Riedel, 1983 This paper is a critique of the thesis propounded in W. A. Lewis' Nobel lecture that economic growth in developed countries is the main driving force of exports and growth in developing countries. The trade engine theory is shown to rest on highly restrictive assumptions which it is argued have become increasingly inappropriate as a consequence of far reaching changes in the composition of LDC exports Empirical analysis is undertaken to show that the main gear of the trade engine the linkage between economic prosperity in developed countries and export growth of developing countries is highly unstable and hence mechanically inefficient The trade engine theory it is argued is no more applicable in recent decades than Kravis showed it was in the nineteenth century
