

Origin of the Earth

The Earth probably formed from material in the solar nebula—the cloud of gas and dust that led to the formation of the Sun. This material gradually grew into a larger and larger body that became a red-hot ball of rock and metal. Later the rocky crust formed, its surface cooling enough to allow the continents to appear. Even later the oceans arrived, as well as the tiny organisms that released oxygen into the atmosphere. Although much of this gas was initially consumed in chemical reactions, over time, it allowed the development of multicellular organisms and an explosion of life that took place at the start of the Paleozoic Era, 542 million years ago.

Continental Drift

Over time the continents, which are part of massive plates that drift across the Earth's surface at the rate of a fingernail's growth, 1/16 inch per year, have shifted, broken up, and reformed over part of the planet's history. When tectonic plates are pushed together, they can push together and submerge one under the other, or they can separate and create a rift basin. The rift basin enlarges and can eventually fill with water, forming a sea that eventually becomes the site for a new ocean basin. When plates drift apart, a process called continental rifting, they create a rift basin for water to fill. Over time, the rift basin can become a new ocean basin, separating at the time of rifting.

The Earth was formed 4.5 billion years ago from a cloud of dust and gas. In the beginning, it was a molten, scorching sphere made of iron, nickel, and silicate. As it cooled, the atmosphere began to form, and the continents began to rise, eventually creating the world we know today.

Chronology

Chronology is the study of time in the Earth's past. It includes the study of fossils and other evidence that helps scientists determine the age of rocks and the sequence of events in Earth's history.

Through the study of fossils, scientists can determine the age of rocks and the sequence of events in Earth's history. This helps them understand the Earth's past and how it has changed over time.

Tectonic Plates

The surface of the Earth is composed of several plates. These plates move around, sometimes colliding and sometimes pulling apart. This movement is caused by the Earth's internal heat and the friction between the plates.
