SMOKEY IS ALIVE AND WELL

In 1950, high in the Lincoln National Forest of New Mexico, there was a tremendous fire. A fire fighter stumbled upon a badly singed and frightened little bear cub. The local Game Warden adopted the cub and he and his wife nursed it back to health. They called him Smokey.

The U.S. Forest Service selected Smokey as the national symbol for forest fire prevention. Shortly thereafter the United States Congress unanimously passed the Smokey Bear law to protect Smokey's name and character, and thus maintain his status.

Today the original Smokey lives happily in Washington, D.C.'s National Zoological Park. He is never lonely, for he has four million visitors a year.
