Computer Assisted Reporting:

Computer-assisted Reporting Bruce Garrison,1995 This book presents an overview of what is suddenly happening within the relatively new field called computer assisted reporting CAR The rapid rate at which personal computing is changing has made it a tool for journalists And as personal computing grows so do its applications in the media newsroom To introduce journalists to computer assisted reporting this book describes how leading journalists are using personal computers for more than just writing in the news gathering process American society has been inundated by a flood of computerized public and private records Many records formerly kept on paper are now stored in computers Many records that were never before kept are now retained in databases And records that are not computerized can very easily be converted into databases These developments have prompted journalists to become increasingly more involved with computers during the past decade Much if not most news reporting now depends upon the use of computers Knowledge of how to access and use computer databases is essential for the journalists of the future This book focuses on the computerization of news reporting Not only does the personal computer of the mid 1990s assist journalists by making writing easier it makes reporting more efficient The book begins with a demonstration of methods reporters can use to get more from their computers data retrieval and analysis information storage and dissemination of that information in both processed and unprocessed forms The book concludes with a proposal for development of computer literacy in the newsroom This is not a how to book It is best described as a what s happening book because it discusses current and future developments in the use of computers for information gathering by the news media The single most important focus is on the changing nature of news reporting in the wake of down sizing down pricing up powering and up speeding of business type desktop and portable personal computers Numerous new approaches to reporting and research have developed in the past decade in parallel with the evolution of personal computers With these new techniques coming to the field of reporting in the mid 1990s there is need for a book that covers both the merger of traditional information gathering methods and the newly developing ones This book introduces readers to the new information gathering and analytical techniques evolving with new computer based technology Successful Strategies for Computer-assisted Reporting Bruce Garrison,2013-10-18 Computers have changed the landscape of both gathering and disseminating information throughout the world As journalists quickly move toward the 21st century and perhaps a new era of electronic journalism resources are needed to understand the newest and most successful computer based news reporting strategies Written to serve that purpose this book is designed to show both professional journalists and students which of the newest personal computing tools are being used by the nation s leading news organizations and top individual journalists It further describes how these resources are being used on a daily basis and for special projects In recent years computers have taken on new and dominating roles in the process of news analysis newsgathering and news processing Today s forward thinking journalists often seek guidance over what they can do to strengthen their ability to be society s information processors and managers This volume focuses upon how successful journalists are using computers through a major national computer assisted reporting CAR study of daily newspapers The study included two national surveys and a series of personal interviews with many of the nation s leading CAR specialists Several current examples of stories used for successful database and online oriented news assignments are provided as part of a series of case studies incorporated throughout the book The additional depth of description and the presentation of portions of stories themselves should help readers to understand the complete process involving CAR oriented journalism Substantial analytical detail is used to discuss the extent of computer use in newsrooms computer training CAR projects CAR in daily reporting hardware and software most commonly used levels and types of online services used in news research and portable hardware and software The book concludes with the author s assessment of the effects and impact of personal computing in the newsroom and the future of personal computer applications in newsgathering Explaining and defining advanced applications or terminology for readers the approach to the book assumes a minimal familiarity with computers but no advanced knowledge of computer operation

Power Journalism Lisa C. Miller, 1998 Providing both practical and theoretical information for student journalists who need to know how and why POWER JOURNALISM demystifies online research by outlining and explaining computer assisted reporting techniques In clear easy to understand explanations of the latest research technologies this text details how and why journalists use specific resources and provides actual computer commands for using each resource as well as written examples by journalists who utilized the discussed technology Resources discussed include newsgroups bulletin board systems commercial databases commercial services such as Compuserve FTP Gopher the World Wide Web CD ROM databases spreadsheet and database management programs and information on nine track tape and floppy disks

Computer-assisted Investigative Reporting Margaret H. DeFleur, 2013-11-26 Conducting computer analyses for the purposes of revealing information of significance to the press represents an extension of one of the most important forms of American journalism into the contemporary era of new technologies Investigative reporting had its start with the establishment of the metropolitan newspaper during the early decades of the 1900s At the time it was a continuation of the evolving tradition of freedom of the press that had characterized American political life since colonial times As it developed investigative reporting stressed facts rather than the opinions of the editor or reporter In turn that tradition had its own intellectual roots Today computer assisted investigative reporting CAIR extends that marketplace of ideas into systematic examinations of the electronic records of government In addition computer analyses of other kinds of information systematically gathered by journalists can provide the press with insights into trends and patterns unlikely to be revealed by other means This unique volume addresses procedures and issues in investigative journalism that have not been explained in other publications It sets forth for the first time a detailed and specific methodology for conducting computer assisted investigative analyses of both large and small scale electronic records of government and other agencies That methodology consists of the logic of inquiry strategies for reaching valid conclusions and rules for reporting what has been revealed by the analyses to the public in clear ways Such systematic methodologies are essential in social and other sciences and the development of a counterpart for investigative journalism has been badly needed That systematic methodology is developed within a context that explains the origin and major characteristics of those elements that have come together in American society to make computer assisted investigative reporting both possible and increasingly a part of standard newsroom practices These include the development of traditional investigative journalism the evolution of computer technology the use of computers by government to keep records the legal evolution of freedom of information laws the rapid adoption of computers in newsrooms the increasing importance of precision journalism and the sharp increase in recent times of computer assisted investigative reporting by American newspapers both large and small The issues addressed in this book are discussed in a very readable context with an abundance of examples and illustrations drawn from the real world of journalism as it is practiced daily in newsrooms around the country Explanations of concepts principles and procedures are set forth in layperson s terms that require very little in the way of knowledge of computers or statistical methods
