Development Anthropology Hari Mohan Mathur,2019-05-13 In Development Anthropology Putting Culture First Hari

Mohan Mathur highlights the role of culture and anthropological work more broadly in development outcomes

Anthropologists contributions in this area have traditionally received little attention but this changed when the World Bank released the 2015 World Development Report This report focused on the social cultural and psychological influences which affect the development process and like Mathur stressed the criticality of anthropological and other social sciences knowledge for the success of development efforts A major contribution to development anthropology this book will interest anthropologists economists sociologists other social scientists policy makers planners development practitioners researchers and trainers and will be particularly useful for graduate students planning their career in the field of development

Perspectives on Development P. F. Leeson,Martin Minogue,1988 Anthropology, Public Policy, and Native Peoples in Canada Noel Dyck,James B. Waldram,1993-03-02 The essays in Anthropology Public Policy and Native Peoples in Canada

provide a comprehensive evaluation of past present and future forms of anthropological involvement in public policy issues that affect Native peoples in Canada The contributing authors who include social scientists and politicians from both Native and non Native backgrounds use their experience to assess the theory and practice of anthropological participation in and observation of relations between aboriginal peoples and governments in Canada They trace the strengths and weaknesses of traditional forms of anthropological fieldwork and writing as well as offering innovative solutions to some of the challenges confronting anthropologists working in this domain In addition to Noel Dyck and James Waldram the contributing authors are Peggy Martin Brizinski Julie Cruikshank Peter Douglas Elias Julia D Harrison Ron Ignace Joseph M Kaufert Patricia Leyland Kaufert William W Koolage John O Neil Joe Sawchuk Colin H Scott Derek G Smith George Speck Renee Taylor Peter J Usher and Sally M Weaver Training Manual in Development Anthropology William L. Journal of Social Development in Africa, 1987

Planned Change Elizabeth Colson, 1988 This paper was first delivered as the Bernard Memorial Lecture at the University of California Berkeley The author a distinguished anthropologist begins by examining the multinational development community and its relationship or lack thereof with Third World communities In her search for understanding the fact that the record of international assistance in the Third World is anything but satisfactory the author traces her own involvement with voluntary aid programs since 1946 and the various trends that appeared and disappeared Her first point is that there are fundamental differences between rural people and development workers about the assumptions behind the meaning of development She gives several examples to show that local people and foreign assistance personnel work often at cross purposes For example she states that development personnel frequently look to self help schemes to provide the impetus for an infrastructure believing that once people see the advantages gained from working together they will move forward progressively this turns out to be wishful thinking One of the most striking discoveries she made in the course of a study for the Berkeley Decentralization Project was that much of this information was already known to members of the development community and that knowing it made no difference since this knowledge goes against the working premises of the development community and interferes with existing career patterns Examples are given to show that social scientists who are hired are expected to tailor advice so it integrates with the prevailing mode of operation of the agency that employs them The development community is thus seen as a well entrenched community which functions like any other bureaucracy insuring itself against rapid change The author shows how the spread of consensus among the various agencies is the result of a close knit international network that transcends the boundaries of the voluntary bilateral and multilateral agencies Her conclusion is that the result of most of the activities of the development community revolve around the community itself and are far removed from hunger poverty and despair of so many people in the countries that receive aid
