Relating in Psychotherapy John Birtchnell, 2013-05-13 In John Birtchnell's last book How Humans Relate he proposed a new theory as the basis for a science of relating Relating in Psychotherapy explains how the relevance of this theory relates to the practice of psychotherapy The theory cuts across all schools of therapy and is a way of describing each school in terms of relating in both the client and the therapist The theory is constructed around two major axes a horizontal one concerning the degree to which we need to become involved with or separated from others and a vertical one concerning the degree to which we choose to exercise power over others or permit others to exercise their power over us With numerous clinical examples John Birtchnell explains how we need to be competent in all four relating positions close distant upper and lower and argues that people who seek therapy usually lack competence in one or more of them but through the course of therapy their relating capabilities can be improved Relating in Psychotherapy can have applications in psychotherapy and in couple and family therapy and will be an invaluable resource for therapists counsellors and other mental health professionals

Cricetinae Elmar Peschke, Gerald Moritz, 2008 Handbook of Interpersonal Commitment and Relationship Stability Jeffrey M. Adams, Warren H. Jones, 1999-09-30 A fundamental assumption underlying the formation of our most important relationships is that they will persist indefinitely into the future As an acquaintanceship turns into a friendship for example both members of this newly formed interpersonal bond are likely to expect that their interactions will become increasingly frequent diverse and intimate over time This expectation is perhaps most apparent in romantically involved couples who through a variety of verbal and symbolic means make explicit pledges to a long lasting relationship In either case it is clear that these relationships represent something valuable to the individuals involved and are pursued with great enthusiasm Virtually all close relationships are formed within the context of mutually rewarding interactions and or strong physical attraction between partners Friends and romantically involved couples alike are drawn to one another because of similarity of attitudes interests and personality and quite simply because they enjoy one another's company This enjoyment coupled with the novelty that characterizes new relationships almost makes the continuation of the relationship a foregone conclusion As relationships progress however their novelty fades conflicts may arise between partners negative life events may occur and the satisfaction that previously characterized the relationships may diminish
