

A New Design for Liberal Learning

The Committee on Academic Programs

Purpose and Principles

In its Mission Statement, The College of New Jersey proudly embraces “its public service mandate to educate leaders of New Jersey and the nation,” and proclaims its aspiration to be “a national exemplar in the education of those who seek to sustain and advance the communities in which they live.” Beginning with our own community and state, we intend to offer the best in liberal learning for undergraduates. To that end, we propose a Design for Liberal Learning that provides a framework for faculty and students to exercise choice and imagination in ensuring that every graduate is broadly and humanely educated.

One of the fundamental goals of liberal education is to prepare free men and women to be active, thoughtful, and caring citizens and to live a life that is examined and deliberate. Since people are born and raised in a particular time, place, and culture, they tend to take for granted that the characteristics of their situation define what is normal. A liberal education compels people to question what is taken for granted. It enables them to see their own origins from a distance and to gain a measure of freedom from the limitations and prejudices that may be part of their cultural heritage. Students who can view their own backgrounds with a critical eye are better prepared to appreciate the values, outlooks, and problems of people who differ from themselves in gender, race, ethnicity, and economic circumstances. Consequently, they are better prepared to contribute to the communities in which they will live and work. This applies to civic responsibility in the national community as well. As citizens of the richest and most powerful nation in an increasingly interconnected world, Americans have a special obligation to keep abreast of national and global developments in politics, economics, science, and culture and to utilize their rights and freedoms to promote the common good.

A second fundamental goal of liberal learning is to ensure that educated men and women have the breadth of knowledge and proficiencies necessary to deal successfully with the challenges and opportunities of life, work, and citizenship in an increasingly complex and rapidly changing world. The College of New Jersey’s Mission Statement is unequivocal in its commitment to breadth as well as depth in the education of its graduates. It states: “The College prepares students to excel in their chosen fields and to create, preserve, and transmit knowledge, the arts, and wisdom.” In the contemporary world, the principal vehicles for the acquisition and transmission of knowledge are the natural, social, and mathematical sciences. The arts today include not only traditional literary, visual, and performing arts but also mixed forms such as cinematic and electronic arts. The search for wisdom has traditionally been the task of philosophy and religion, but other fields such as anthropology, cognitive science, culture studies, and the sociology of knowledge now lay claim to parts of that effort as well. While no undergraduate education can familiarize students with the countless forms that scientific inquiry, artistic creativity, and the search for wisdom have taken, it is essential that students grapple with exemplary subjects and issues in each of these broad sectors. Equally essential is the emphasis
