Covert Action: Legislative Background and Possible Policy Questions, 2008 Published reports have suggested that in the wake of the 9 11 terrorist attacks the Pentagon has expanded its counter terrorism intelligence activities as part of what the Bush Administration termed the global war on terror Some observers have asserted that the Department of Defense DOD may have been conducting certain kinds of counterterrorism intelligence activities that would statutorily qualify as covert actions and thus require a presidential finding and the notification of the congressional intelligence committees Defense officials have asserted that none of DOD s current counter terrorist intelligence activities constitute covert action as defined under the law and therefore do not require a presidential finding and the notification of the intelligence committees Rather they contend that DOD conducts only clandestine activities Although the term is not defined by statute these officials characterize such activities as constituting actions that are conducted in secret but which constitute passive intelligence information gathering By comparison covert action they contend is active in that its aim is to elicit change in the political economic military or diplomatic behavior of a target chosen Congress regulates the CIA's capacity to conduct covert action as part of its oversight of national security agencies. I categorize laws passed by Congress to regulate covert action along two dimensions: authority (prohibitive or enabling) and doctrine (substantive or procedural). Using logistic regression, I find that Congress is more likely to choose substantive laws when faced with recent intelligence scandals. Congress is less likely to create a prohibitive law as support by the president's party and the opposition party increases. These results are supported by the legislative history of a sample of these laws. I argue that these laws lead to a shift in covert action components that can best be explained through the interaction of principal-agent dynamics and the variation that exists in the perception that Congress's laws are binding on the behavior of the executive and the national security agencies. To test this theory, I engage in process tracing of primary source documents of decision making related to U.S. involvement in the Angolan civil war (1974-1989) and the Yugoslavian civil war (1992-1995). The results suggest that covert actions are modified in response to legal regulations but sometimes in unanticipated ways that attempt to evade these laws. Substantive prohibitive laws can result in an escalation of the violence of covert action contrary to the intent of Congress. But procedural prohibitive laws can caution decision makers and slow escalation. Third parties, especially those invested in but not actively participating in the conflict, serve as a vital conduit for this covert activity but ensure an attenuated relationship to the U.S.

CIA's Black Ops John Jacob Nutter, 2009-12-04. Since 1947 the Central Intelligence Agency has secretly worked to subvert foreign powers and even overthrow enemy governments to further United States influence abroad. The vast array of CIA black ops operations including covert acts against Saddam Hussein and international terrorists, secret Afghan missions, the overthrow of Guatemalan leaders, assassination plots against Castro and others, domestic and foreign narcotics conspiracies, underground Mafia relations, and even controversial plans to dupe top U.S. officials, has stretched its influence far beyond its original purpose. A member of the Association of Former Intelligence Officers, Dr. John Jacob Nutter reveals that the U.S. has become too enamored with covert action that black ops have become U.S. foreign policy and that the CIA has developed into a policy maker dangerously independent of the government that created it. Nutter explains the many and varied types of covert action: subsidies, graymail, propaganda, psychological and economic warfare, military support, paramilitary operations, coups d'état, and assassinations, and provides detailed examples of success and failure undertaken in the name of national security. Unusual and exclusive: The CIA's Black Ops is a courageous and unprecedented declassification of foreign exploits and domestic secrets covering clandestine activities from the birth of special operations to today's underground actions, many operations so covert that government officials don't know or don't want to know they are taking place. A well-recognized expert on terrorism and covert operations, John Jacob Nutter is a historical researcher and former assistant professor at Michigan State University, specializing in covert action, international politics, and guerrilla warfare. He has appeared on numerous news programs including National Public Radio and CNN.
