

Amelia's Notebook

It was awkward and uncomfortable and not just at all.

Nadia didn't know what to think.

You said Carly was great. She seems stuck-up, if you ask me.

No, really, she's not like that at all. Maybe she had a bad weekend. Or she has some big project due. She's really warm and smart and funny. Give her a chance. You'll see.

But Nadia didn't see. First we had science - without Carly - but my next class was English with Ms. Hanover. True, there wasn't a chance to talk during class, but before it began, I tried to say hi.

Carly wasn't exactly warm or smart or funny.

Can't talk now. I've got to finish this.

In fact, I would swear she was giving me the cold shoulder.

The next two classes were okay because Carly wasn't in them, but then came lunch - a complete disaster. Nadia tried, she really did, but Carly either disagreed or ignored her. I'd wanted to make school fun for Nadia, but now I'd settle for bearable. What happened to make everything turn out so badly?

These French fries are pretty good for cafeteria food.

Sure, if you like soggy, potato-wedges-of-blend.

Um, well, I guess we have really good food at my school, so tell that one.

Ja, Amelia, have you finished that French project yet?

No, I haven't even started. You know Nadia takes French too.

Well later okay?

Okay, Carly, she's the last way.

What hey? I have no idea what you're talking about.
