

INTRODUCTION

palace was fresh from the hands of the builders, but its inadequacies became obvious following the Queen's marriage to her cousin, Prince Albert of Saxe-Coburg, in 1840. The root of the trouble was that the palace was too small, both for state functions— and for family life. Splendid though George IV's State Apartments were, none of them was big enough for a court ball. Equally serious for the newly married couple was the absence of nurseries. The obvious solution was to make the palace a complete quadrangle by closing the east side of the courtyard with a new wing. This scheme was adopted, entailing the removal of the Marble Arch.
