DONGO— The Last Act

*Pier Luigi Bellini delle Stelle
and Urbano Lazzaro*

This is a story about the real resistance movement in Italy. The authors commanded a small unit fighting in the mountains round lake Como. Their recollections have all the immediacy usually associated with an eye-witness account—indeed the text is supplemented by transcripts from combat diaries and other documentary sources.

From the outset their existence was precarious. The enemy far outnumbered them; their equipment was inefficient and outdated; their supplies of food sparse. And yet, because men can rise to heights of fortitude under appalling conditions, they survived. More than that, their operations were a triumphant success.

But it was the fortuitous turn of events at Dongo which give this unit's history its particular significance. For it was at Dongo that Pietro, Bill, and the others halted a German column to discover that they had captured Mussolini with the remnants of his government. The sequel to this fantastic coup, the summary execution of Mussolini, his colleagues, and his mistress, Clara Petacci, by a squad from the Communist-controlled Liberation Headquarters in Milan, provides a tragic and horrifying end to Dongo—The Last Act.

It is an amazing last act, which contains elements of comedy, of farce even, but it is, in the last analysis, as brutal and stark an episode as any in the shocking story of waste and misery which made up Italy's tragedy in the dying moments of the war.

Translated from the Italian by W. C. Darnell
