

Elderly People Coping With the Aftermath of War: Resilience Versus Vulnerability

Shaul Kisli, Ph.D., Shira Hardman, Ph.D., Marisa Górsbil, M.A., Yohanan Esbel, Ph.D., Leela Zysberg, Ph.D.

Objectives: The present study compares coping of elderly people and two younger groups 1 year after a war. Coping was determined by stress symptoms and posttraumatic recovery and two levels of resilience. Design and Setting: Telephone surveys (covering most of the city streets) were sampled randomly from the neighborhood of Kfar Saba (a town next to the Lebanese border) about a year after the end of the Second Lebanon War. Participants: The sample constituted 470 adult residents of the town. Participants were divided into three age groups: elderly (age 65 years and older,  $N = 165$ ), adults (age 46–64 years,  $N = 252$ ) and young adults (age 20–45 years,  $N = 462$ ). Measurements: 1) Stress symptoms measured by short version of Brief Symptom Inventory; 2) Individual resilience measured by Sense of Coherence Inventory; 3) Posttraumatic Recovery Inventory (PTRI); and 4) Public Resilience Scale (included a scale for community and national resilience). Results: The results indicated 1) The elderly group reported significantly higher levels of stress symptoms and lower levels of PTRI; 2) Females in the three age groups reported higher levels of stress symptoms and lower levels of PTRI and individual resilience than males; 3) Individual and public resilience negatively predicted stress symptoms and positively predicted posttraumatic recovery, across three age groups; and 4) Public resilience has a differential effect on stress symptoms in each of the three age groups but not on PTRI. Conclusion: Results question the division of older people into a vulnerable or invulnerable group, indicating that the participants responded concurrently in a more vulnerable and a more resilient manner. Older people were characterized by higher levels of postwar stress symptoms, as well as a higher sense of coherence. (Am J Geriatr Psychiatry 2012; 20:391–407)

Key Words: Age and gender, individual and public resilience, posttraumatic recovery, senior citizens, senior resilience, senior vulnerability, stress symptoms

The present study focuses on the distinction between elderly people and two younger age groups in relation to two potential long-term outcomes: stress symptoms and posttraumatic recovery, and two levels of resilience, 1 year after a war. The main question of the current study is whether elderly people differ in their resilience and vulnerability from two younger age groups.

Coping With War And Its Aftermath:

Coping with War and Its Aftermath Jerry Braza, Kathleen Braza, 1991      In the Aftermath of War and Torture ,2005

In today's armed conflicts it is civilians that suffer the most. As a result, the rate of traumatization is very high among migrants driven to flee from such conditions. The violent experiences they encounter have a lasting effect. The circumstances in receiving countries make coping difficult, and not even their secure stay means an end to their traumatization. It is there two major questions arise: What possibilities have victims in coping with such traumas themselves, and what responsibility do societies share in this process. This anthology is devoted to the issues of torture and war traumatizations. Ahepan ,1929      Resilient Children Laura Nabors, 2022-01-08. This book examines resilience in childhood, focusing on positive functioning and development often in the face of everyday difficulties and adversities. It highlights critical areas in which children and their families can demonstrate resilience and attain positive social, emotional, academic, and behavioral life trajectories. The book describes key factors related to enhancing resilience for children, such as positive relationships with adults, positive school environments, and meaningful connections with others. It provides practical guidelines for promoting resilience in youth and reviews the critical nature of resilience across various situations, critical issues, and different developmental periods. It offers guidance on strategies for fostering resilience in children. Key topics featured include: Raising children to have grit and tenacity; Fostering resilience in children at school and within their families; Nurturing resilience in children with chronic illnesses and posttrauma. Resilient Children is an essential resource for researchers, professors, and graduate students, as well as clinicians, therapists, and other professionals in developmental, clinical, and school psychology, family studies, public health, and social work, as well as all related disciplines, including educational psychology, child and adolescent psychiatry, and pediatrics.      The Market, the State, and the Export-Import Bank of the United States, 1934-2000 William H. Becker, William M. McClenahan, Jr, 2003-03-10. This is the first history of the Export-Import Bank of the United States. Ex-Im, based on archival sources, is the government's exports credit agency. Ex-Im promotes exports through loans, guarantees, and insurance and has had an unusual history as a public institution shaped by market principles. Congress mandated that the Bank only provide credit with a reasonable assurance of repayment. But the rules of the market and the needs of the state conflicted at times. Ex-Im has played a part in all the major events that marked the growing involvement of the United States in the international economy. In the last two decades, the bank has carried on its congressionally mandated mission in an increasingly complicated environment brought on by changes in private capital markets, congressional constraints on its budgets, major financial crises in Latin America and South East Asia, fast-moving developments in communications and information technology, and the demands of non-governmental organizations devoted to environmental protection.      Handbook of Child Psychology, Child Psychology in Practice William Damon, Richard M.
