

General relativity

From the world learned of the revolutionary Special Theory of Relativity proposed by Albert Einstein and published in 1905, physics underwent its most revolutionary change since the days of Isaac Newton. Nevertheless, Einstein had yet another surprise left: the so-called General Theory of Relativity, of 1916—a much more complex and complete theory from which several interesting predictions arise and have been confirmed over time.

Why a second theory?

According to Einstein, the laws of physics are the same for all observers, but the way they are perceived is different. Einstein's theory of relativity is a generalization of Newton's theory, which is only valid in the case of low speeds and weak gravitational fields. Einstein solved the problem of providing an theory by providing an equivalent principle.

A deformed universe

Einstein established that gravity was not a force, but rather the consequence of the deformation of space-time that any body with mass generates. Mass, when accumulating in a point, deforms the space around it and attracts any body, but it doesn't through that causal action.

The most fundamental principle of general relativity is the equivalence principle, which states that the laws of physics are the same in all frames of reference.

Light that bends

Perhaps the most surprising confirmation of one of Einstein's predictions, based on the General Theory of Relativity, happened in 1919 during the course of a solar eclipse.

According to the general theory of relativity, the path of light is curved by the presence of mass. This was first demonstrated during the total solar eclipse of 1919, when the positions of stars were observed to shift slightly from their expected positions.

In 1919, the positions of stars were observed to shift slightly from their expected positions during the total solar eclipse of 1919.

4 dimensions

For the universe according to Einstein's theory, although the space is three-dimensional, time is the fourth dimension, which, like space, is curved by mass.

Gravitational lenses

Another prediction based on the General Theory of Relativity concerns gravitational lenses. Because of the distortions, which is also related to the gravitational deformation caused by gravity, the image of certain far stars and galaxies is distorted when seen from the Earth.

The image that is produced by the gravitational lensing effect is distorted and magnified. This is because the light rays are bent towards the lensing object, which causes the image to appear larger and more complex.

HERSCHEL & LAPLACE

The laws of physics are the same for all observers, but the way they are perceived is different. Einstein's theory of relativity is a generalization of Newton's theory, which is only valid in the case of low speeds and weak gravitational fields. Einstein solved the problem of providing an theory by providing an equivalent principle.

Electromagnetic waves

Einstein proposed that an intense gravitational field could produce the deflection of waves, in other words, this would make them lose energy. Because waves "stretch" when being moving about it, they become matter, this effect would cause a redshift in the observed frequency waves.

Perturbation of Mercury's orbit

Astronomers had discovered a discrepancy in the expected position of the planet Mercury that could not be explained by Newtonian or classical physics without including some transcendental element. Einstein used his theory to explain the discrepancy, calculating the position of the planet's orbit.

The discrepancy in the orbit of Mercury was explained by Einstein's theory of general relativity. The theory predicted that the orbit of Mercury would be slightly perturbed by the curvature of space-time caused by the Sun's mass.
