

Review of Property, Substance and Effects: Anthropological Essays on Persons and Things.
Marilyn Strathern. London: The Athlone Press 1999.

Mark S. Mosko
Australian National University

Few anthropologists over the past few decades can claim to have made the impact, both within and outside the discipline, as Marilyn Strathern. Her writings have spanned an exceptionally wide range of issues; beyond her ethnographic and comparative analysis of Melanesian sociality with which readers of this journal are most likely to be familiar, there are highly influential discourses on feminist theory, the nature/culture dichotomy; patterns of Euro-American kinship, new reproductive birth technologies, audit culture in Euro-American universities, and intellectual property rights, just to name the more salient. While it has been possible for those who have followed these various trajectories to identify certain kindred themes – personhood, exchange, the contrasts of Melanesian/Euro-American sociality – and while one suspects that there is a single-mindedness beneath it all, Strathern has never been altogether explicit herself on quite how the diverse parts of her scholarship connect up. Like her paradigmatic Melanesian person, perhaps, each new revelation, dazzling in itself, has made visible only part of the larger body of ideas contained within. This volume is thus of considerable value, for the compounded effect of the various chapters renders more clearly than their separate publication elsewhere a semblance of the full corpus of Strathern's thought.

Containment of this order is suggested in the book's structure, as the various internal chapter components are wrapped within a single integument, 'Chapter 1 The Ethnographic Moment' divided so as to both open and close the volume. For Strathern, the 'ethnographic moment' consists in the complex epistemological connections between the collection of field observations and subsequent analysis. Like Highlanders' display practices, she suggests, ethnography is revelatory, inviting the reader to consider what is not revealed on the evidence of what is. But also, data collected at one time and place can yield new insights when viewed from other places and times, as when the perspective of the early 1970s in Mt Hagen is deployed to analyse events observed in the mid 1990s, or when Melanesian understandings of personhood and exchange are deployed for comprehending Euro-American practices associated with new birth technologies or the development of intellectual property rights legislation. In other regards, this initial/final chapter addresses several of the other key tropes of her previous writing, which are further elaborated in the internal chapters: revelation and concealment, the elicitation of effects, fractal self-similarity, parts to wholes, and so on.

Thus, for example, Chapter 2 contrasts the capturing of Asmat and Marind-Amin heads with the painting of Euro-American portraits as a commentary on the individuality of Melanesian persons and the dividuality of Euro-Americans. Chapter 3 similarly juxtaposes Melanesian and Euro-American personhood focussing upon the consequences among the former when it is money rather than life-force which is circulated in relations. Chapter 4 reveals how Euro-American knowledge of procreation has embedded children's development in the acts of parents; for Euro-Americans as for Hageners, knowledge is based in relations, and additional knowledge, such as the discoveries of DNA, can have different effects upon relationships. Chapter 5 reports on Strathern's long-delayed return visit to Mt Hagen in 1995 and the episodic historical transformations from mid-1960s moka exchange, to expansion of coffee production and cash-cropping, to 1990s consumerism. Chapter 6 explores Strathern's notion of personal partibility

Property, Substance, and Effect Marilyn Strathern,2023-03-16 In engaging essays celebrated anthropologist Marilyn Strathern reflects on the complexities of social life Property Substance and Effect draws on Marilyn Strathern's longstanding interest in the reification of social relations If the world is shrinking in terms of resources and access to them it is expanding in terms of new candidates for proprietorship How new relations are brought into being is among the many questions about property ownership and knowledge that these essays bring together Twenty years have not diminished the interest in the book's opening challenge if one were inventing a method of enquiry by which to configure the complexity of social life one might wish to invent something like the anthropologist's ethnographic practice A wide range of studies deliberately brings into conversation claims people make on one another through relations imagined in the form of body substance along with the increasing visibility of conceptual or intellectual work as property Whether one lives in Papua New Guinea or Great Britain categories of knowledge are being dissolved and reformed at a tempo that calls for reflection and for the kind of lateral reflection afforded through the ethnographic effect A Passion for Difference Henrietta L.
