Abstract: Protein is the polypeptide chain of amino-acid sequence. Proteins of all species, from bacteria to humans, are made up from the same set of 20 standard amino acids. In order to carry out their function they must take a particular shape which is known as fold. All the enzymes hormones and antibodies are also proteins. To treat certain toxic-microorganism or invader we need certain antigen-antibody complex in the organisms. Just as amino-acid sequence forms the proteins, the polynucleotide sequence forms the nucleic acids. The gene is a part of DNA macromolecule responsible for the synthesis of protein chains. There are 20 amino-acids responsible for the formation of protein and 4 nucleotides responsible for the formation of DNA (RNA). Therefore, we can say that protein text is written in 20-letter and the DNA (RNA) text is written in 4-letter language. The information contained in genes in DNA is transferred to mRNA during transcription.

Keywords: polypeptide chain, globular and fibrous proteins, neurotransmitters, chemical kinematics, misfolded proteins, conformational change, activation energy, entropy, active centers, transcription, enzymatic catalysis, haptens.

1. INTRODUCTION

Proteins are invariable participants in all life processes which control the metabolic and bio-energetic processes. Proteins are involved in the storage, transfer, transformation, recoding and reception of chemical signals in macromolecules, molecules and ions of living systems. DNA replication, transcription of genetic information from DNA to mRNA and transfer of the information encoded in the mRNA are the main functions of protein.

2. PROTEINS

Protein is the polypeptide chain of amino-acid sequence. Proteins of all species, from bacteria to humans, are made up from the same set of 20 standard amino acids. Nineteen of these amino acids are with a primary amino group (-NH₂-) and a carboxylic acid (carboxyl; -COOH-) group attached to a central carbon atom. On the side of the central carbon; a hydrogen atom and a variable side-chain or 'R' group are attached. This 'R' group determines the type of amino-acid. The bonding between amino group (-NH₂-) of one amino-acid and a carboxylic acid (carboxyl; -COOH-) of another amino-acid is called peptide bonding. The one exception to this general structure is proline, which has a secondary amino group and is really an α -imino acid. The names of the amino acids are often abbreviated to three letters, for example, proline is abbreviated to Pro.

From the structural aspects, proteins can be grouped into globular and fibrous proteins. Fibrous proteins are soluble in water because they have high amount of polar molecules on the surface which are hydrophilic in nature. Globular proteins are insoluble in water because they have globular or hydrophilic molecules in excess amount at their surface.

Some fibrous proteins are:

- i. Myosins: Proteins of contractile muscle
- ii. Collagens: found in bones, teeth, skin, connective tissues...etc.
- iii. Fibrin: found in blood clot
