Assessing The National Streamflow Information Program Pb 2004:

Assessing the National Streamflow Information Program National Research Council, Division on Earth and Life Studies, Water Science and Technology Board, Committee on Review of the USGS National Streamflow Information Program, 2004-09-19 From warning the public of impending floods to settling legal arguments over water rights the measurement of streamflow streamgaging plays a vital role in our society Having good information about how much water is moving through our streams helps provide citizens with drinking water during droughts control water pollution and protect wildlife along our stream corridors The U S Geological Survey s USGS streamgaging program provides such information to a wide variety of users interested in human safety recreation water quality habitat industry agriculture and other topics For regional and national scale streamflow information needs the USGS has created a National Streamflow Information Program NSIP In addition to streamgaging the USGS envisions intensive data collection during floods and droughts national assessments of streamflow characteristics enhanced information delivery and methods development and research The overall goals of the program are to meet legal and treaty obligations on interstate and international waters support flow forecasting measure river basin outflows monitor sentinel watersheds for long term trends in natural flows and measure flows for water quality needs But are these the right topics to collect data on Or is the USGS on the wrong track In general the book is supportive of the design and content of NSIP including its goals and methodology for choosing stream gages for inclusion in the program It sees the ultimate goal of NSIP as developing the ability to use existing data gathering sites to generate streamflow information with quantitative confidence limits at any location in the nation It is just as important to have good measurements during droughts as during floods and it therefore recommends supporting Natural Resource Conservation Service forecast sites in addition to those of the National Weather Service

Assessing the National Streamflow Information Program, 2004 This Web site is an electronic version of the report Assessing the National Streamflow Information Program published in 2004 This report helps the public to see why knowledge of the flow of water in the nation s streams and rivers plays a vital role in flood protection water supply pollution control and environmental management

Flash Floods Kevin Sene, 2012-12-14 Flash floods typically develop in a period a few hours or less and can arise from heavy rainfall and other causes such as dam or flood defence breaches and ice jam breaks The rapid development often associated with a high debris content can present a considerable risk to people and property This book describes recent developments in techniques for monitoring and forecasting the development of flash floods and providing flood warnings Topics which are discussed include rainfall and river monitoring nowcasting Numerical Weather Prediction rainfall runoff modelling and approaches to the dissemination of flood warnings and provision of an emergency response The book is potentially useful on civil engineering water resources meteorology and hydrology courses and for post graduate studies but is primarily intended as a review of the topic for a wider audience
