

ANTIGENS

An antigen is a foreign substance that elicits the production of antibodies.

Antigenicity is therefore the term used to refer the ability of an antigen to react with the specific antibody that has already been formed.

A complete antigen must be able to stimulate the formation of specific antibodies AND react specifically with these antibodies (immunogenicity and reactivity, respectively).

A hapten is a molecule that is too small to elicit an immune response, but can react with a specific antigen.

An epitope is the site on an antigen recognized by an antibody. An epitope is also known as the antigenic determinant.

An immunogen is an antigen that induces an immune response when introduced into the body. Therefore, immunogenicity is defined as the ability of a subject to provoke an immune response.

Factors that determine the immunogenicity of an antigen include:

1. Foreignness – The molecule must be non-self.
2. Molecular size – The larger the molecule, the more the immunogenic it is.
3. Chemical and structural complexity – the more complex a molecule is, the more immunogenic it is. E.g. proteins are more likely to be immunogenic than a carbohydrate.
4. Presence of an antigenic determinant (epitope)
