

INTERDEPENDENCE

Interdependence refers to the connection between two or more individuals or entities where they depend on each other to attain a common objective.

DEFINITION

Interdependence involves multiple parties where one party has resources that the other party needs to meet its requirements, and this transfer of resources works mutually. Both parties help each other to meet their needs.

Interdependence is important because it allows for specialization in producing certain goods and services, which increases efficiency and leads to a stronger economy.

EXAMPLES

Family Systems: Every member of a family system relies on each other for emotional or physical support, household tasks, or for shared living expenses.

Business Partnerships: Companies or business ventures working together to share resources, expertise, and knowledge builds interdependence between the partners.
