

AMRITSAR - A CITY OF MYTHS AND REALITIES

Jit Kumar Gupta

*INTRODUCTION

Cities are reservoirs of skill and manpower and accordingly have been reckoned as engines of economic growth and development besides generators of wealth and major contributors to the economic health, social well being and quality of life prevailing in any area. In addition, cities are also repositories of Cultural Heritage reflecting personality of a community over different periods of its existence. Heritage provides vital link between past and present and has important role cast in shaping the destiny of the community. These footprints of past provide us with vital information and knowledge about the ancient culture, way of life, level of development, building techniques, use of materials, Art and Architecture besides physical, social and economic edges of the society of a particular period. Accordingly, it becomes important that these repositories of knowledge, forming irreversible links between past and present, are not only, carefully and thoughtfully, preserved and preserved but also appropriately maintained and developed in order to ensure that they are not lost to the posterity.

India with one of the longest histories of human habitation and civilization spanning over a period of 5000 years has been fortunate to inherit enormous wealth of built heritage. If India has inherited enormous wealth of built heritage, State of Punjab in general and Amritsar city in particular has also followed the footprints of the great nation and state. With history spanning over 433 years, Amritsar has emerged as the premier city of the state of Punjab and is known as its economic capital. Presence of Golden Temple and Jallianwala Bagh has given a unique place to this dynamic and vibrant city of Amritsar in the history of the state and the nation. Growing from a small village, Guru ka Chak/Chak Guru Ram Das, Amritsar has emerged as the focal point of Sikh faith and is rightly called Sifti da Ghar (The Home of all virtues). During its journey of last 433 years, Amritsar is known, as not only its economic but also religious and political capital of the state of Punjab. City of Golden Temple, also symbolizes the spiritual heritage of the people of Punjab.

With city growth and development revolving around the Harimandir Sahib, Amritsar grew in an organic manner radiating in all directions. Rapid growth of Amritsar was witnessed during the period of Sikh misls in the later half of 18th century when the city was almost rebuilt. Harimandir Sahib was reconstructed with the holy tank and parikarma. In addition, bargas, katras, bazaars, forts, gardens, tanks and havellies came up in large number as constituents of the expanding city. Major contribution to the city built heritage came from Maharaja Ranjit Singh, greatest builder of his time, in the shape of several structures created during his regime. Encircling his summer capital with a masonry wall, having 240 watch towers and 12 beautiful gates, to safeguard the city from invaders, was the most beautiful structure he created in Amritsar city, majority of which got lost after the annexation of Punjab by British. Gobindgarh Fort built at the behest of Jaswant Rao Holkar, as his additional treasury, was another monument constructed by Maharaja on a commanding site to defend the city. The fort constructed in brick and lime, having number of bastions, majestic iron gates and several
