Dalal,Eduardo Salas,2013-09-05 Employees are constantly making decisions and judgments that have the potential to affect themselves their families their work organizations and on some occasion even the broader societies in which they live A few examples include deciding which job applicant to hire setting a production goal judging one's level of job satisfaction deciding to steal from the cash register agreeing to help organize the company's holiday party forecasting corporate tax rates two years later deciding to report a coworker for sexual harassment and predicting the level of risk inherent in a new business venture In other words a great many topics of interest to organizational researchers ultimately reduce to decisions made by employees Yet numerous entreaties notwithstanding industrial and organizational psychologists typically have not incorporated a judgment and decision making perspective in their research The current book begins to remedy the situation by facilitating cross pollination between the disciplines of organizational psychology and decision making The book describes both laboratory and more naturalistic field research on judgment and decision making and applies it to core topics of interest to industrial and organizational psychologists performance appraisal employee selection individual differences goals leadership teams and stress among others The book also suggests ways in which industrial and organizational psychology research can benefit the discipline of judgment and decision making The authors of the chapters in this book conduct research at the intersection of organizational psychology and decision making and consequently are uniquely positioned to bridging the divide between the two disciplines

Attitudes and Behavioral Decisions Arnold Upmeyer, 1989 This book summarizes theoretical and empirical work that was performed in a large scale cross university research project on the relationship between attitudes and behavior The entire program has been funded by the Deutsche Forschungsgemeinschaft DFG an institution that operates similarly to the American National Science Foundation In 1981 the DFG ruled to release the project for a five year period with the option to extend if the extension proposal would suggest a major alteration of research goals The participants are presently in the stage of transition between the first five year allotment and the granted extension We feel that this is the most opportune time to summarize the development of the project for an international audience Until now only scattered publications have existed This book is more than just a compilation of previously published results Rather it is the original contributions and a substantial share of newly published empirical results that guarantee an up to date exposition of the entire program The general goal of the research group is to perform basic research in attaining explanations for the relationships between attitude and behavior and to improve the predictability of current predictor models In pursuing this goal we are not primarily interested in the immediate strategy of redefining predictor variables within the framework of the general linear statistical model Rather we emphasize cognitive processes and structures that predispose a person's behavior that accompany behavior or that change as a result of prior behavior
