Centralization And Power In Social Service In Delivery Systems:

Centralization and Power in Social Service Delivery Systems J.R. Hollingsworth, R. Hanneman, 2012-12-06 In the United States and other western nations debates rage over whether welfare medical care educational programs and many other aspects of public policy should be the responsibility of central government local government or the private sector In most nations the issues of regional autonomy and decentralization are constantly in the news with intensity varying from mild debate to open warfare Less visibly battles are continuously fought in the political arena over what groups should have the right to make decisions concerning the allocation of society's resources In response to these concerns social scientists have focused considerable attention on the causes and consequences of centralization and decentralization in political economic and social organizations Their analyses of centralization have been varied ranging from systems that are quite small e.g. the family the firm and the community to those systems that are very large e.g. the welfare state While centralization is a concept of major concern in most of the social science disciplines each discipline has tended to focus on centralization with a different set of interests Economists have been very much concerned with the causes and the consequences of the concentration of economic resources Political scientists have long sought to understand the origins and consequences of dictatorship and democracy Sociologists have focused on inequalities in the distribution of power

Centralizing the Cult Julia Rhyder, 2019-10-16 Back cover In this work Julia Rhyder examines the Holiness legislation in Leviticus 17:26 and cultic centralization in the Persian period Rather than presuming centralization as an established norm Leviticus 17:26 forge a distinctive understanding of centralization around a central sanctuary standardized ritual processes and a hegemonic priesthood

Neighborhood Organization and Interest-Group Processes David J. O'Brien, 2015-03-08 Since the end of the civil rights era in the sixties it has become increasingly clear that social and political conflicts cannot be resolved entirely at the national level Struggles between residents of poor neighborhoods and local interest groups or public authorities present some of our most explosive domestic political problems today This study seeks insight into these problems through an analysis of efforts during the sixties to organize the poor to pursue their interests in local decision making processes David J O'Brien holds that both organizers and scholarly observers of the grass roots movement have failed to understand properly the process by which interest groups are formed Arguing that the demise of neighborhood organization cannot be attributed to supposedly unique social psychological or cultural characteristics of the poor he develops an analytical framework that emphasizes the strategic role of incentives and organizational resource problems This framework helps explain not only the failure of organizers in the sixties to grasp the problems of interest group formation but also the assumptions that prevented them from identifying the source of their frustration The author assesses the different approaches that have been taken to neighborhood organization and outlines a model for future efforts Originally published in 1976 The Princeton Legacy Library uses the latest print on demand technology to again make available previously out of print books from the distinguished backlist of Princeton University Press These editions preserve the original texts of these important books while presenting them in durable paperback and hardcover editions The goal of the Princeton Legacy Library is to vastly increase access to the rich scholarly heritage found in the thousands of books published by Princeton University Press since its founding in 1905
