

Animal Farm by George Orwell

Old Major, a prize-winning boar, gathered all the animals of the Manor Farm for a meeting in the big barn. At the meeting, Major told them of his dream to free animals of all human control and oppression. He also told the animals that they must work toward such a paradise and taught them a song called "Beasts of England," in which his dream vision was lyrically described.

The animals greeted Major's vision with great enthusiasm. When Major died only days after the meeting, three younger pigs—Snowball, Napoleon, and Squealer—formulated his main principles into a philosophy called Animalism. One night, the animals managed to defeat the farmer Mr. Jones in a glorious battle. They ran Mr. Jones off the land and renamed the property Animal Farm. Finally free from their human oppressor, the animals then dedicated themselves to achieving Major's dream. The cat-horse Snowball decided himself to concentrate with particular zeal on converting his great strength to the prosperity of the farm and adopting, as a personal motto, the affirmation "I will work better."

With all the animals consenting to put their personal interests aside and work for the collective welfare of the farm, Animal Farm prospered. Snowball worked at teaching the animals to read, and Napoleon led a group of young puppies to educate them in the principles of Animalism. When Mr. Jones happened to take back his farm, the animals defeated him once again. It was soon to be known as the Battle of the Cowshed. The animals soon lost the farmer's abandoned gun as a token of their victory.

As time passed, however, Napoleon and Snowball would increasingly conflict over the future of the farm, and they eventually began to fight with each other for power and influence among the other animals. Snowball conceived a scheme to build an electricity-generating windmill, but Napoleon subtly opposed the plan. At the meeting to discuss whether to take up the project, Snowball gave a passionate speech. Although Napoleon gave only a brief speech, he then made extreme noise and threw small dogs—the puppies the Napoleon had confiscated in order to "educate" them—into the air to drive and chase Snowball away from the farm. Napoleon quickly assumed leadership of Animal Farm and declared that there will be no more meetings.

From that point on, Napoleon asserted that the pigs alone would make all of the decisions "for the good of every animal." With Snowball out of the picture, Napoleon was quickly changed his mind about the windmill, and the animals, especially Snowball, devoted their efforts to continuing it. One fateful day, after a storm, the animals found the windmill toppled. The human farmers in the area declared enough was the animals had made the valley too rich, but Napoleon was certain that Snowball returned to the farm to sabotage his windmill.

Napoleon then decided to stage a great purge, during which various animals who had allegedly participated in Snowball's great conspiracy murdered any animal who opposed Napoleon's unopposed leadership. Several human dogs at the farm of Napoleon's attack dogs. With his leadership compromised, Napoleon began expanding his power, teaching history to make Snowball's defeat Napoleon also gradually created a pig store and more like a human being, sleeping in a bed, drinking whiskey, and engaging in trade with neighboring farmers. Of course, the original Animalism principles strictly forbade such activities, but Snowball, Napoleon's propagandist, justified every action to the other animals, convincing them that Napoleon was a great leader and he was making things better for everyone. The truth was, however, that Napoleon's "evidence" was cold, forged, and over-the-top.

One day, Mr. Frederick, a neighboring farmer, chased Napoleon to the purchase of some timber and then attacked the farm, dynamiting the windmill, which had been rebuilt at great expense. After the destruction of the windmill, a pitched battle ensued, during which Snowball received major wounds. The animals rescued the farmer, but Snowball's injuries worsened his. When he later fell while working on the windmill, he could sense that his time had nearly come, and one day, Snowball was nowhere to be found.

Found. According to Napoleon, Snowball had died in peace after having been taken to the hospital, praising the Revolution with his last breath. In reality, however, Napoleon had told his own loyal and long-suffering workers to a gun maker in order to get money for whiskey.

Years went by in the Animal Farm, and the pigs became more and more like human beings—wearing clothes, carrying whips, and wearing clothes. Eventually, the windmill project of Animalism, known as the Great Lushingtons and described on the side of the barn, was reduced to a pig-human trade "all animals are equal, but some animals are more equal than others."

One day, Napoleon, after having purchased a human farmer named Mr. Pilkington at a dinner, declared his intent to ally himself with the human farmers against the following classes of both the human and animal communities. He also changed the name of Animal Farm back to the Manor Farm, stating that this title was the "correct" one.

Looking in at the party of "lives" through the farmhouse windows, the common animals could no longer tell which were the pigs and which were the human beings.
