The divisions of philosophy

How philosophy is to be divided into sub-disciplines has seemed to fascinate philosophers throughout its history. Four different approaches to the divisioning of philosophy are given as diagrams below:

In general, the following non-technical definitions will apply: Ontology: The philosophic science of the nature of being "in general"; Epistemology: The philosophic science dealing with the problem of knowledge; Psychology: Really "rational" or "philosophical" psychology, dealing with man as a "being"; Theodicy: The philosophic science of God, First Cause, Creator - sometimes "natural theology"; Logic: The philosophic science of correct thinking; Ethics: The philosophic science dealing with human acts - sometimes "moral philosophy"; Politics: The philosophic science of man's social end, including the form of state organization; Axiology: The philosophic science which studies the general nature of "value"; Aesthetics: The philosophic science which studies art, beauty, artistic value
