Compassionate Landscape:

Compassionate Landscape Humphrey Carver, 1975-12-15 From the top of the Clent Hills in England one can look out over the Black Country to the north and the Forest of Arden to the south As a boy Humphrey Carver looked at these two landscapes one synonymous with the harsh ugliness and dehumanization brought by industry the other with idyllic harmony between man and land At the start of the depression Carver came to Canada where in many and varied ways he has tried to bring the qualities of humanity and compassion to the landscape shaped by the man His career has involved him in the initiation of and contact with almost everything that has happened in the last forty years in the field of housing planning design and urban and community action This book is a history of the development of an awareness of institutions and of policies on the shaping of the man made environment It is however more than that Mr Carver describes his own life and sensibilities his family and his colleagues with a trained and compassionate eye and a taut and careful prose Rarely does one encounter an autobiography of such perceptive and satisfying craftsmanship Those who know him will not be surprised those who do not will be delighted to discover a work of such a warm and sympathetic humanity Humphrey Carver has a message for us all

A New Garden Ethic Benjamin Vogt, 2017-09-01 In a time of climate change and mass extinction who we garden for matters more than ever Our landscapes push aside wildlife and in turn diminish our genetically programmed love for wildness How can we get ourselves back into balance through gardens to speak life's language and learn from other species Plenty of books tell home gardeners and professional landscape designers how to garden sustainably what plants to use and what resources to explore Yet few examine why our urban wildlife gardens matter and not just for ourselves but for the larger human and animal communities Author Benjamin Vogt addresses why we need a new garden ethic and why we urgently need wildness in our daily lives lives sequestered in buildings surrounded by monocultures of lawn and concrete that significantly harm our physical and mental health He examines the psychological issues around climate change and mass extinction as a way to understand how we are short circuiting our response to global crises especially by not growing native plants in our gardens Simply put environmentalism is not political it's social justice for all species marginalized today and for those facing extinction tomorrow By thinking deeply and honestly about our built landscapes we can create a compassionate activism that connects us more profoundly to nature and to one another

Contesting Canadian Citizenship Dorothy Chunn, Robert Menzies, Robert Adamoski, 2002-08

Over the past 15 years the citizenship debate in political and social theory has undergone an extraordinary renaissance To date much of the writing on citizenship within and beyond Canada has been oriented toward the development of theory or has concentrated on contemporary issues and examples This collection of essays adopts a different approach by contextualizing and historicizing the citizenship debate through studies of various aspects of the rise of social citizenship in Canada Focusing on the formative years from the late 19th through mid 20th century contributors examine how emerging discourse and practices in diverse areas of Canadian social life created a widely engaged but often deeply contested vision of the new Canadian citizen The original essays examine key developments in the fields of welfare justice health childhood family immigration education labour media popular culture and recreation highlighting the contradictory nature of Canadian citizenship The implications of these projects for the daily lives of Canadians their identities and the forms of resistance that they mounted are central themes Contributing authors situate their historical accounts in both public and private domains their analyses emphasizing the mutual permeability of state and civil ian life These diverse investigations reveal that while Canadian citizenship conveys crucial images of identity security and participatory democracy within the ongoing project of nation building it is also interlaced with the projects of a hierarchical social structure and exclusionary political order This collection explores the origins and evolution of Canadian citizenship in historical context It also introduces the more general dilemmas and debates in social history and political theory that inevitably inform these inquiries
