

2. Creative Interchange defined

For Henry Nelson Wieman (Charlie's Palmgren's mentor), Creative Interchange is an experience, the kind of experience that transforms us in ways in which we cannot transform ourselves. According to him, Creative Interchange is the experience of spontaneous human-heartedness and human-thoughtfulness that opens us to an increasingly widened and deepened appreciation and understanding of ourselves as individual persons and of all other persons we encounter.

Ordinarily, the experience of most of us is dominated by the concerns of survival and security. This survival-security orientation easily minimizes Creative Interchange between people since it is an orientation fed by the Vicious Circle™. In fact, the harder we try to live within our Vicious Circle, the more intolerable life becomes. Charlie Palmgren has described the obstacles to Creative Interchange brilliantly in 'The Chicken Conspiracy'. His mentor, Henry Nelson Wieman emphasizes, in his book, Man's Ultimate Commitment, the obstacles as:

“These barriers to creative interchange are not only internal to the individual. They are also social. Barriers are built into all our social institutions.”

The reality is that the experience of Creative Interchange is a somehow difficult to attain experience of individuals and societies. Wieman is calling for the experience of Creative Interchange as something more than an occasional interlude in our lives; he is calling for the experience of creative interchange as the nurturing matrix out of which we continuously build, correct, and rebuild our individual lives, our societies, and the one world to which we are inescapably connected:

“Creative Interchange is that kind of interchange which creates in those who engage in it an appreciative understanding of the original experience of one another. ... Creative Interchange has two aspects, which are two sides of the same thing. One aspect is the understanding in some measure of the original experience of the other person. The other aspect is the integration of what one gets from others in such a way as to create progressively the original experience, which is oneself.”

3. The Nurturing Matrix of Creative Interchange

Creative Interchange is that kind of experience that confirms and assures us of our sense of individuality, both apart from and in connection with other human beings. Human nature needs Creative Interchange more than anything else, if it is to be satisfied in the deepest and most far reaching ways.

Creative Interchange is not limited to the acquisition of information alone.

Creative Interchange:

Creative Interchange John A. Broyer, William Sherman Minor, 1982 Henry Nelson Wieman's 1884-1975 most distinctive philosophical contributions are his identification of creative interchange as the ultimate process in human experience through which people and their institutions are able to create, sustain, improve, and correct their value perspectives and equally important his description of creative interchange in psychological, sociological, historical, religious, and institutional contexts as subject inquiry and the experimental test of consequences. This massive collection of thirty-three original essays with an appendix and index represents the first formal attempt to consider fully the interdisciplinary implications of creative interchange. Following an introduction, the book is structured into six sections beginning with historical studies on the development of Wieman's philosophy of creativity. With this information as a base, the subsequent five sections treat: 1) his metaphysics and theory of knowledge; 2) his theory of value; 3) creative interchange in the context of rhetoric and literary criticism; 4) creative interchange as a guide for social philosophy; and 5) creative interchange as related to current philosophic trends. The essayists include prominent philosophers such as Charles Hartshorne, Lewis E. Hahn, and S. Morris Eames, as well as emerging scholars who have responded to Wieman's conception of creative interchange. Conflict and the Promise of Creative Interchange Dwight Welch, 2006. The problem of unyielding conflict has increasingly marked our common life in Western society. This is also the case in mainline Protestant churches as they wrestle with many of the same issues that dominate the greater society. These conflicts are threatening to split communities apart. This thesis is concerned with conflict and whether it can be used to deepen rather than split communities. This thesis engages the work of Henry Nelson Wieman and his concept of creative interchange, a process where people of contrasting values seek to learn from the other and incorporate this such that new values and interests inclusive of all involved can develop. Applying this to religious communities, this thesis contends that God can be identified with this process of creative interchange so that while great amounts of diversity could be had in religious communities, a single source of devotion could still connect people in their differences. But proposing this idea for religious communities means engaging this idea at the religious level in a manner that has continuity with the given traditions of that community. To the degree that this can be done, this proposal could be in a position to contribute something to the problem of conflict. Leading Systems Change in Public Health Kristina Y. Risley, Christina R.
