

ALGORITHMSIntroduction

The first thing to do when presented with a problem is to construct a model that translates the problem into a mathematical context.

Algorithm

is a finite set of precise instructions for performing a computation or for solving a problem?

Properties shared by algorithms:

Input	An algorithm has input values from a specified set.
Output	From each set of input values an algorithm produces output values from a specified set. The output values are the solution to the problem.
Definite or Precise	The steps of an algorithm must be defined precisely.
Correct	An algorithm should produce the correct output values for each set of input values.
Finite	An algorithm should produce the desired output after a finite (but perhaps large) number of steps for any input in the set.
Effective	It must be possible to perform each step of an algorithm exactly and in a finite amount of time.
Generality	The procedure should be applicable for all problems of the desired form, not just for a particular set of input values.

Searching Algorithms

The objective of a search algorithm is to determine if a certain element, say x , is among a list of elements.

Linear or Sequential Search

Compare x and a_1 .

When $x = a_1$, then the solution is the location or subscript of a_1 , which is 1.

When $x \neq a_1$, then compare x with a_2 .

When $x = a_2$, then the solution is the location or subscript of a_2 , which is 2.

When $x \neq a_2$, then compare x with a_3 .

... and so on until x is equal to one a_i or x is not equal to any element on the list.

ALGORITHM 01: Linear Search in C++ code

function linear_search ( int x, int a1, a2, ..., an )
{
    int i;
    i = 1;
    while ( ( i ≤ n ) && ( x ≠ ai ) )
    {
        i = i + 1;
    }
    if ( i ≤ n )
    {
        location = i;
    }
    else // ( i > n )
```
