Howell,2001 The Historical Ecology Handbook makes essential connections between past and future ecosystems bringing together leading experts to offer a much needed introduction to the field of historical ecology and its practical application by on the ground restorationists Chapters present individual techniques focusing on both culturally derived evidence and biological records with each chapter offering essential background tools and resources needed for using the technique in a restoration effort The book ends with four in depth case studies that demonstrate how various combinations of techniques have been used in restoration projects The Historical Ecology Handbook is a unique and groundbreaking guide to determining historic reference conditions of a landscape It offers an invaluable compendium of tools and techniques and will be essential reading for anyone working in the field of ecological restoration Alternatives ,2000 Indigenizing the Museum Majel Boxer,2008 This dissertation begins by situating decolonization as a theoretical tool in examining the tribal museum model It argues that individuals institutions and communities engaged in tribal museum projects can uphold and perpetuate past museum methods of exhibition which were and are colonialist in nature Thus utilizing the theory of decolonization is important in the examination of two tribal museums the Osage Tribal Museum in Pawhuska Oklahoma and the Museum at Warm Springs in Warm Springs Oregon The development of a decolonized tribal museum model is complicated by the notion that to be truly decolonized a colonized community can not be engaged with the very same institutions which have had a hand in their colonization This dissertation is laid out in the following order Chapter One examines the colonialist relationship between indigenous nations museums and the federal government in the nineteenth and twentieth centuries Chapter Two develops the theory of decolonization as it is understood within the U S context and underscores the various ways that two indigenous nations have negotiated these relationships and maintained their respective museums as sites of decolonization Chapter Three examines the early history of the Osage Tribal Museum which emerged in 1938 as the first tribal museum to be built by an indigenous nation Chapter Four explores the Museum at Warm Springs and departs from the previous chapter by describing and analyzing the permanent exhibits and reading them through the lens of decolonization finally Chapter Five draws upon the work of scholars employing the theory of decolonization to their reading of the NMAI The purpose of this chapter is to illustrate the complex nature of decolonization That is that collaboration between the museum profession and indigenous communities is not decolonizing work rather it is the overarching goals of community empowerment truth telling and privileging indigenous knowledge that are markers of decolonization The dissertation concludes by asserting that decolonization as a theory and practice can be empowering to indigenous communities
