Coping, connection appraisal, and well-being during COVID-19 in the U.S., Japan, and Mexico

¹Department of Psychology, San Diego State University/University of California San Diego Joint Doctoral Program in Clinical Psychology, San Diego, CA, United States, ²Department of Psychology, Haverford College, Haverford, PA, United States

Introduction: The COVID-19 pandemic has affected nearly every facet of life, constituting a “new normal” and prompting an ongoing collective psychological crisis. People’s ways of coping with the pandemic and corresponding well-being are of particular research interest; however, these constructs have largely been examined using deductive quantitative approaches, deficit-based lenses, and mononational samples.

Methods: The current mixed-methods study used inductive-sequential (QUAL → QUAN) approaches to explore positive coping strategies (approach coping style and COVID-related connection appraisal) and well-being (loneliness, distress, and happiness) across individuals from the United States, Japan, and Mexico. Qualitative data were gathered from $N = 141$ U.S., Japanese, and Mexican adults to examine how people perceived connection during the pandemic.

Results: Qualitative analyses illuminated common themes in which people appraised the pandemic as an opportunity for connection and strengthened interpersonal relationships. Quantitative measures, including a newly-developed questionnaire on COVID-related connection appraisal, were then administered to a separate sample of $N = 302$ adults in the U.S., Japan, and Mexico to assess associations among approach coping style, COVID-related connection appraisal, and well-being outcomes (loneliness, distress, happiness). Quantitative analyses found significant associations among approach coping style, COVID-related connection appraisal, and all well-being outcomes. Of note, these associations did not differ by country. COVID-related connection appraisal mediated the relationship between approach coping style and two well-being outcomes (loneliness and happiness).

Discussion: Findings point to approach coping style and connection appraisal as pathways for resilience and growth in the face of global suffering.

1 Introduction

We are currently in the midst of a communal and scientific reflective process over the unprecedented and ongoing impacts of the COVID-19 pandemic. Since March 11, 2020, when the World Health Organization (WHO) declared COVID-19 a global pandemic, nearly every facet of life all over the world has been impacted by this public health crisis. Not only has there been profound loss of human life (estimated to be 14.83 million excess deaths by the WHO;
