Taxonomic AIDS

Taxonomical Aids

- Taxonomic studies of various species of plants, animals and other organisms are useful in agriculture, forestry, industry and in general in knowing our bio-resources and their diversity.
- These studies would require correct classification and identification of organisms.
- Identification of organisms requires intensive laboratory and field studies.
- The collection of actual specimens of plant and animal species is essential and is the prime source of taxonomic studies.
- It is used for classification of an organism, and the information gathered is also stored along with the specimens. In some cases the specimen is preserved for future studies.
- Biologists have established certain procedures and techniques to store and preserve the information as well as the specimens. Some of these taxonomic aids are explained below

1. Herbarium

- Herbarium is a store house of collected plant specimens that are dried, pressed and preserved on sheets.
- Further, these sheets are arranged according to a universally accepted system of classification.

- These specimens, along with their descriptions on herbarium sheets, become a store house or repository for future use .
- The herbarium sheets also carry a label providing information about date and place of collection, English, local and botanical names, family, collector's name, etc.
- Thus Herbaria also serve as quick referral systems in taxonomical studies.

2. Botanical Garden

- These specialised gardens have collections of living plants for reference.
- Plant species in these gardens are grown for identification purposes and each plant is labelled indicating its botanical/scientific name and its family.

The famous botanical gardens (Royal botanical garden) are at Kew (England),

Indian Botanical Garden, Howrah (India) and at National Botanical Research Institute, Lucknow (India).

3. Museum

- Museums have collections of preserved plant and animal specimens for study and reference.
- Specimens are preserved in the containers or jars in preservative solutions.
- Plant and animal specimens may also be preserved as dry specimens.
- Insects are preserved in insect boxes after collecting, killing and pinning.
- Larger animals like birds and mammals are usually stuffed and preserved.
