Desperate Surgery in the Pacific War Thomas Helling, M.D.,2017-01-18 Caring for the wounded in the World War II Pacific Theater posed serious challenges to doctors and surgeons The thick jungles remote atolls and heavily defended Japanese islands of the Pacific presented dangers to medical personnel never before encountered in modern warfare as did the devastating new kamikaze attacks Sophisticated treatments including complex surgery were by necessity far removed from the fighting requiring front line doctors to do the minimum often under fire to stabilize patients until they could be evacuated damage control it would later be called Navy doctors responsible for thousands of sailors aboard fleets in battle found caring for the wounded daunting or nearly impossible Yet to save lives medical resources had to be kept as close as possible to the action This book systematically details the efforts and innovations of the doctors and surgeons who worked to preserve life under extreme peril Sabiston and Spencer Surgery of the Chest E-Book Frank W. care can be initiated sooner the variety of specialists can be increased and fewer complications are likely The problem is that tactical commanders resist moving surgeons away from their areas of responsibility even when it will provide timelier more comprehensive care to their wounded This problem of resistance and its complexity are well known The objectives of this paper are to discuss the reasons for this resistance and to provide recommendations for overcoming it The author contends that when conditions permit in late Phase 3 or beyond small surgical sites should be consolidated into a theater trauma system that provides rapid evacuation increased surgical capability and surge capacity for mass casualty events Although the benefits of this restructuring can be shown empirically the resistance to moving surgeons off the battlefield is high This resistance exists because of the emotional attachment of leaders to their wounded and because keeping surgeons on the battlefield is a common belief passed down through generations of military personnel The author analyzes the intense emotional attachment of leaders to their men through excerpts of conversations with tactical commanders during Operation Iraqi Freedom OIF He then discusses three misunderstood concepts driving line officer opinions on surgical placement the Golden Hour the Capability Proximity Paradox and the Surgeon s Mentality Data from civilian trauma literature and from OIF surgeons experience are provided as supporting evidence The author concludes with recommendations for maintaining premier surgical care on a dynamic battlefield
