

CHILD DEVELOPMENT THEORIES

Maslow's Hierarchy of needs reminds parents that children can only thrive emotionally and academically when their basic needs are met. Prioritize love, safety, and belonging before focusing on higher-level growth.

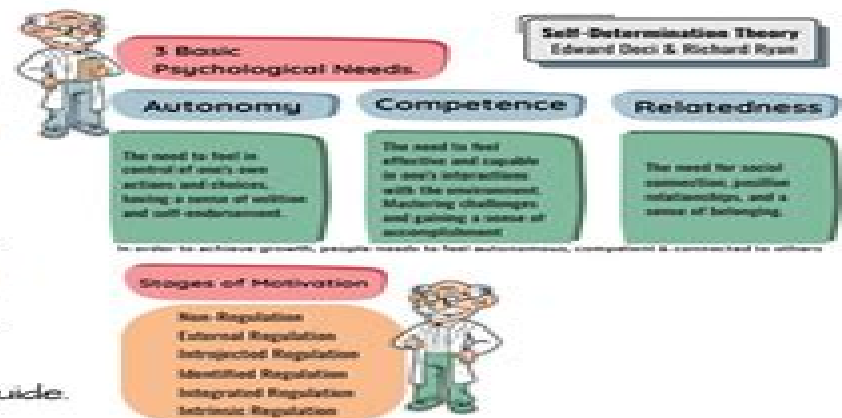

The Attachment theory shows parents that their attentiveness, affection, and availability directly shape their child's sense of security and ability to form healthy relationships throughout life.

The Ecological Systems theory encourages parents to be mindful of how external factors like peers, school environments, and community influence their child. Parents can create positive home environments while also being aware of the larger social systems affecting their child's growth.

The Self Determination theory guides parents in nurturing their child's natural drive to grow by supporting their sense of autonomy and competence. Rather than controlling every decision, parents can encourage their child's independence and confidence in their abilities.
