Week 1: Chronic Medical Conditions

What is health psychology?

- A branch of psychology that focuses on how people cope and manage illness and health behaviours.
- The main goals of health psychology are:
 - Understanding psychological factors implicated in health and illness
 - The promotion and maintenance of health
 - The prevention, treatment and management of illness
 - Improving health-care systems and health policy
- “An interdisciplinary field concerned with the application of psychological knowledge and techniques to health, illness and health care” (Marks et al., 2011)
- Health psychology is a relatively new discipline

What do health psychologists do?

- Health psychologists aim to understand health and illness behaviours e.g. why do some people behave in a healthy way and others not? Why do some people refuse to take their medication or visit a doctor?
- They use their knowledge of psychology to promote general well-being and understand physical illness
- They are specially trained to deal with the mental and emotional aspects of health and illness
- Health psychologists conduct basic and applied research e.g. interventions that lead to an improvement in quality of life with patients with chronic pain, applied benefit because it is looking to see if there is a benefit.

Health psychology research

- Health damaging behaviours – identifying behaviours that may be damaging to a person’s health e.g. smoking, drug abuse, poor diet, and why people do or do not engage in them
- Health protective behaviours – exploring why some people engage in healthy protective such as exercise, a healthy diet, oral hygiene, health checks/ self-examination and attending preventative medical screenings.
- Health related cognitions – investigating cognitive processes which mediate and determine health and illness behaviours (e.g. health beliefs, locus of control, self-efficacy) and whether modifying such processes are associated with therapeutic benefits.
