Avelignese

A typical mountain breed, the Avelignese is found throughout the mountainous areas of northern, central, and southern Italy, especially in the Trentino-Alto Adige and Veneto regions of the northeast. It is related to the Hallinger of Austria, having descended from a common ancestor, the old Avelignese-Hallinger, and the two breeds show marked similarities in coloration and conformation.

Standing 13.3 to 14.2 hands in height, the Avelignese is chestnut, often with white markings and has a full, light or flaxen mane and tail. Tough and muscular in its general appearance, it has a short, rather heavy neck, powerful quarters, short sturdy legs, and hard joints and hoofs.

The breed, noted for its longevity and docile temperament, is used mainly for pack transport in the mountains and for light agricultural work.
